"Urban Peacebuilding in Times of a Pandemic"

Roundtable Abstract

The 'local turn' in peace studies draws attention to urban peace processes and to the central concept of urban peacebuilding. Urban peacebuilding is a strategy which seeks to mitigate tensions and create communications and interactions between rival groups in contested and divided cities. The city with its many characteristics - proximity between rival groups, economic dependence, or shared spaces - is a dynamic and volatile ground for peace processes. The Covid-19 pandemic that has plagued the world for the past two years has been particularly prevalent within cities. It alienates residents from each other and forces municipalities to address diverse communities in the city and the crisis triggered a potential for exaggerating conflict but also for intergroup cooperation. The proposed round table will bring scholars of urban peace building with specializations on different cities, such as Jerusalem, Nicosia, Belfast, Johannesburg and Mostar. The scholars will present their findings and insights on divided cities through the theoretical perspective of urban peacebuilding and will try to answer the following questions: (1 ) What is the difference between urban peace and state-centric peace? (2) How did the COVID-19 crisis affect the relations between rival groups in contested cities? (3) What are the main conclusions and recommendations regarding peace settlements and arrangements for contested cities?
